LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF THE WAR

Correspondence of the Associated Press

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, Sept. 13.—Officers who have been through the campaign since its start at Mons a year ago speak of the recent review of the British troops at the front as one of the most compelling scenes they have ever witnessed. The spot was a parade ground not many miles from the trenches. Three battalions of guards made a wall of khaki which melted into the background of sward and hills. At a review in England they would have formed a most brilliant display in their gorgeous parade uniforms—three famous crack regiments offered by sons of the famous families of England. Again and again their ranks had been thinned and refilled. Officers of the old regular army who had come as spectators recognized familiar faces of the survivors among the officers and saw many strangers who had taken the place of those who had fallen.

"But the guards are still the guards—Scotch or Irish or Grenadiers or Coldstream," said one of the officers. Lord Kitchener and M. Miller, the French minister of war, who were seeing the British front together, were to review them. It was the second visit to the front paid by "K," as every officer calls him.

Sir John French appeared first, walking across the parade ground to the reviewing station where he welcomed Lord Kitchener and M. Miller, and who arrived in a big limousine. Perhaps there were in all fifty spectators, mostly officers stationed in the neighborhood, of a scene which had a thrill for all that no review in England watched by a big concourse including gaily dressed women ever had. Not a woman was present, not a civilian except the correspondents. A bright sun was shining. Five or six thousand feet overhead a British plane was patrolling the air in a great circle throughout the ceremony.

As the secretaries of war of England and France faced the guards their bayonets rose at present arms in gleaming right lines. Lord Kitchener's khaki made him hardly discernible against the wall of khaki as the party walked the length of the front ranks in formal inspection. M. Miller and in his black suit with a short coat and his slouch traveling hat and trousers tucked into a pair of galloons was a distinct moving black point. When they returned to the reviewing stand the band struck up the Marseillaise and while Lord Kitchener and Sir John and the other officers stood at a salute that one civilian figure in this military scene stood uncovered.

Then with the march past the band played the airs associated with the regiment whose companies were going by. One officer at the head of his veterans was conspicuous because he saluted with his left hand. His right sleeve was empty. Guardsmen must be tall; and some of the giants were taller than Lord Kitchener himself. A number of the men in the ranks had fought at Mons and on the Aisne and survived too, from the first and second battles of Ypres. Others had yet to see a battle. Every rifle, every hand that held a rifle, every foot as it was lifted seemed perfectly in time.

"The guards still know how to march past though they have been to war for a year," said a staff officer who had been in the guards.

As the last company was going past another kind of music was heard. All the chauffeurs of the party were cranking up their cars. It is well known that "K" wants no time wasted between functions and inspections when he is at the front. A volley of clicks as limousine doors were closed and the two war ministers who are at the head of the armies of France and England were away to other scenes. Naturally they also inspected portions of the new army—which the French peasants and villagers all call the "Keecheenaires."

"I had always heard of 'K' as a grim, stern sort of man," said a lieutenant of the new army. "But he was smiling and genial to us—quite different from what we expected. We were a little frightened when we heard he was going to inspect us."
